Why Flippers energise lessons

PUPIL POWER AT WORK

EVERY secondary school teacher has those golden classroom moments when pupils first master a hard to learn subject.

The joy of understanding beams out of their young faces like bottled sunshine.

There is an immediate growth in self-confidence about learning. Pupils start volunteering more answers in class. They become genuinely involved.

For them the process of learning has suddenly become a two-way street.

That is why Flippers study cards work so well in high school classes. Pupils view them as their own personal learning tool.

Because it is personal to them, memorising things like French vocabulary or maths becomes a lot simpler.

It's a way of absorbing and reinforcing all sorts of information without strain. Here's how Flippers work.

Each ring contains 60 blank cards.

Under teacher direction, pupils write in the word or sum. On the other side of the card they write the answer.

When all the cards for the lesson have been filled in, they then look at the question and try to give the answer.

Were they right? Just flip over the card and see.

Repeated use of the cards quickly helps them memorise the information.

For pupils, one big plus of Flippers is that they no longer have to worry about giving a wrong answer in front of their classmates - often an inhibiting factor.

They only have to consult "their" study cards to find the correct answer.

Flipper cards help boost self-confidence. They are also extremely versatile. They can be used to memorise all sorts of information, from foreign language vocabulary to maths, geography, history and even music.

They are a superb tool, either for class assessment of how well every pupil is absorbing information, or for exam facts revision.

For ease of use, Flippers come on a hinged ring. Blank cards can first be removed for filling in. Fact cards already well learned can be removed to allow pupils to concentrate only on the information they still have to master.

In revision, the cards can be removed and jumbled up before being put back on their ring. This ensures pupils really know what's on the cards.

In fact, pupils themselves love testing their knowledge, working in pairs.

Pupils relate very positively to Flippers study cards because they feel empowered by them. It works for teacher, too!
